A School That Is More Than A School Where They Teach Boys to Farm. By ELBERT HUBBARD.

Farm school, near Doylestown, Bucks county, Pa.

This school was started 15 years ago, with very meager capital, by Rabbi J. Krauskopf, of Philadelphia.

The rabbi was filled with a desire to lessen the pressure in the congested districts of the great cities through training young people to leve God's great out of doors.

It is a hard task to teach farming on prescript basis in any event, but a practical basis in any event, but think of the task of rabbl Krauskopf in teaching Jewish boys to farm! For 2000 years the Jews have been weaned from agriculture. Once they were the supreme farmers of the world, But since the fall of Jerusalem under the emperor little, in the year 40 A.

They have not learned to love the clouds, the rain, the storm, the trees, he been the birds, the butterflies. It takes time to make close compan-ions with all the creeping things and those that fly and swim in the waters or in the air.

People grown to manhood's estate can not have their habits changed in a day, a wrek, a month or a year.

To relieve the congested districts you must take the boys and girls. They will then adapt themselves to the new environments.

City children make good farmers. And country children, having had an overdose of farming, are often filled with a desire to get away and taste of the pleasures of the city.

For 15 years rabbi Krauskopf has put every dollar of his income—all the money he makes from lectures, wedding fees, and various addresses—overy cent has gone into the Farm school. The place has prospered and he has proved absolutely beyond a doubt that his theories are founded on common sease, that is, on science, for science is the common knowledge of the common They were not allowed to own land. In fact, they had no names. To prepare the soil, to plant, to plow, to sow, to reap and garner the harvest—this was not for them.

It is too much to expect that you can take a whole family out of the ghetto and set them down in the country and teach them to til, the soil.

They are lonely. The great open ding fees, and various addresses—every cent has gone into the Farm school. The place has prospered and he has proved absolutely beyond a doubt that his theories are founded on common sense, that is, on science, for science is the common knowledge of the common people, classified.

It was a great delight for me to spend a day at the Farm school. The place is undenominational and non-sectorian Religion here consists in doing your work and being kind. Can you improve on it?

I saw boys of 15 and 16 who could hitch up a team, go off a mile or so acroes the fields and finish a job of plowing, dragging, drilling, alone. They could take care of animals, whitewash buildings, repair the fences, lay out roads, cut down worthless trees, and cut them up into lengths suitable for firewood.

The lads moved about their tasks quietly, modestly, with an integrity of ntent and purpose which betokened that they were men, indeed. The hope of the world lies-and it The hope of the world lies—and it always has—in the plain people, the people who can begin a task and finish it; who know what they are going to do and who can go about it and do it. Rabbi Krauskopf himself is a man of this same type—simple, quiet—unpretentions, able to make a decision and live for it, fight for it, and, if necessary die for it.

To get along without tobacco, stim-lants, narcotics, drugs and find health and inspiration in the sunshine and the soil, this, indeed, is a great achieve-

Rabbi Krauskopf has 10 times as any applications for scholarships as can possibly take care of. He has the plan by which the con-ested districts of the cities can be re-leved, but he has not been able to en-lieved, but he has not been able to en-list the necessary capital; neither has he been able to get the right kind of teachers to carry on the work in as ex-tensive a way as it deserves.

To get the teachers who can teach from books and see sermons in stones and brooks and bees and trees and birds, and all the great out of doors that needs a tengue, this is the task. In fact, the rabbi has to raise his teachers.

Most "educated" people are appall-ingly ignorant. You can graduate at Harvard, Yale, Princeton or Columbia without literally knowing peas from LONG SLEEVES FOR FALL. LONG SLEEVES FOR FALL.

According to the Dry Goods Economist the question of sleeve length has been practically settled, judging from the quantity of long sleeves seen in the sample lines for the new Season. This applies to both walsts and dresses. The long shoulder line is used to a considerable extent in conjunction with the new sleeves, although the set-in style is also represented. Preference is shown for a shaped sleeve fitting in closely to the arm below the elbow, buttons often being used on the outside seam half way to the elbow to hold the sleeve snugly to the arm.

Peon and Millionaire In Same Class When They Come to International Berder-Eternal Vigilance the Motto of Uncle Sam.

Eternal vigilance is the price of keeping ammunition out of Mexico via the international bridge.

An hour with the berder patrol stationed at the Santa Fe and Stanton street international bridges is a moving picture of human nature as it exists along the border. For one who thinks that the life of a soldier is a care-free existence with nothing to do but sit under waving palms and have superior officers bring him gin rickeys, as per the recruiting office posters, would have a rude awakening should be happen down at the river front any afternoon and watch the soldiers frisk Mexican wagons, street car passengers, push carris and export shipments without discretion or discrimination as to age, color or previous condition of services.

Lengths, He, if anyone, should be passed. But the patrol guards have long age learned that they dare not trust their best friend. They force the aged wood seller to unload his wares and subject himself, his wagon and wood to a close search for the coveted ammunition. The next victim of the president's proclamation is a float driver whose big wagon is loaded with household goods, bales of bedding and barrels of dishes. Nothing doing on the request that it be passed without examination. The guard, a strapping big fellow with an Irish face, is very sorry but he just must make the required search. It is a waterhaul, and the float load of refugee junk returning to Mexico is allowed to pass.

War Cars Are Handled.

A Mexico car comes bowling over the Santa Fe switch. There is the usual nondescript crowd of Mexicans, Americans and the border riffraff which would be hard to classify as either. Fxperienced horder men stand up, remove their hats and submit to the close search without question. Tenderfeet gupe and wonder until the corporal of the guard politely but firmly requests him to unlimber himself from the car seat and stand search. Down the coat to the high along the trousers to the shoetops the guard runs his sunburned mitts, searching for the clandestine ammunition by the fouch system. An extra pat is giver the pistol pocket and the subject of scrutiny is permitted to resume his seat and resume the view along the Rio Grande of the north. Sometimes, but not often, the women on the car are requested to adjourn themselves to the woman inspector's parlor on the bridge and they may along the Rio Grande of the north. Sometimes, but not often, the women on the third degree for fear they might have some ammunition concealed on their person.

A shipment of carbonic seld gas lanks is hauled to the bridge for export. Here is a puzzler. How in the name of corporal Denny can a tank of gas be inspected? To open it means an explosion and to pass it means an explosion of the "old man," otherwise
